EMBED >More News Videos An impromptu meeting took place at the White House briefing room in which President Trump responded to a question from a senior White House official. WASHINGTON (KTRK) -- President Donald Trump's administration will also be looking to Congress to address illegal immigration.According to a senior White House official, there is an executive order in the works to allow legal immigrants to gain citizenship if they speak English and pay taxes. It is targeted to help legal residents who have been in the country for several years and want to stay and work, the official said.The official declined to discuss the specifics because it's currently being worked on.The president has the authority to issue the executive order, the official said. The president has issued dozens of them since taking office.The official said the president has considered ways to provide a pathway for legal immigrants to become citizens through the path to citizenship.It has been floated as a possible compromise with Congress, but that may be too much to ask. A Senate Republican aide told ABC News this week the issue has received "considerable" White House attention, but "no movement on actual legislation."The rhetoric that used to describe a potential deal on the issue--"Dreamers" versus "citizenship"--was how the issue was presented during the Obama administration. Now it's a fiery debate that is f678ea9f9e
